Written by Marco Attard
20 January 2011

Adder announces its Infinity network DVI extender-- promising to let one to build previously impossible networks.

The company says the extender allows for computers to be located anywhere, as well as share connections and control, monitor computer use, collaborate and switch computers.

It is also Adder's first device to allow multicasting across a network.

The Infinity uses USB 2.0 to connect all HIDs, as well as storage and other USB devices.

Go AdderLink Infinity