

It's the perfect business plan: deliver digital signage content on-demand via the internet to customers.

But cloud-based digital signage developer Camvine in UK is forced to call in the administrators. The first crack in the business façade came when the company didn't take up its booth space at ISE 2012. The company was expected to show its customised versions of its CODA platform.

The affairs, business and property of Cambridge Visual Networks Limited (trading as Camvine) are being managed by the administrators.

Customers and creditors of the company will receive written notification by the joint administrators shortly.
